

Mark. When you look back on your life, what is it that will truly remain forever etched in your memories? When will the tomorrow come that you've been waiting for? I woke up half dead this morning. Did it make the evening news? No... Another day, another lost dream... What is it that you recall about a woman? Is it the way that she breathes in her sleep? Is it the smell of her? Always take the time to watch the setting sun.

What I am suggesting is that just for a moment, just as an experiment; if you will, wrap your mouth around these words:

"I am float-god who lofts headily upon floaty planks, through the misty netherworld of deep pow pow"
Go on...You're resisting.
%^@$ you! Try it..

And after you see that there is no tomorrow, and after the day has evaporated into a sprinkle of dewy star-drops through the cold winter morning, it is then that you arrive. It is then that you arrive...

Retire the toothpicks you've been limping around on. "they're partying like it's 1999". You have little time left to act. I'm afraid that the autumn of your ski career approaches.

Consider these numbers:

125

90

115

This ski is now considered a mid-fat...

Welcome to 2008.

We've been burried up to our grundles in snow. Mammoth- 48" in the past 7 days. I just hit Powder Mountain in Utah with 20" of fresh on top of 48" of fresh. Friggin' belly-deep in the goods, know what I mean? There's been a whole lot of that this year.

Mark, you need a fat ski to take your enjoyment of the sport to the next level.

Consider the 2006 BD Havoc from WildyX in a 173:

Then you need a state-of-the-art binding like the Naxo NX21 that has the DIN of a modern Alpine race binding (13) and a virtual pivot mechanism that makes touring smooth. Use them with your existing A/T boot that:

I'll sell you the whole rig for way below retail. I'm &^$# in bleedin' here for you, Mark, and it's because I want to see you happy!

And as now you face this transition phase in your skiing career, that many other lifetime skiers before you have, I invite you to reach deep within. You may consider that there is another way. There is another way.

"Tele..."

Only you can decide if you are ready to take the next step. The blue pill, or the red pill? It's all up to you.
